BACKGROUND

The Italian explorer Christopher Columbus did not reach North America, but his discovery of the Caribbean started the European race to occupy the 'New World'. European settlement of what is now the USA started with the Spanish in Florida in 1565. The French set up colonies, notably in Louisiana, and there were small settlements of Swedes, Germans and Dutch. But the main colonists were the British who settled in large numbers along the eastern coast in the 17th century, and in 1763 the British had full control of the lands from New England to Georgia. Native

Americans who occupied these lands were driven inland. The American War of Independence, when America broke away from Britain, took place in 1775–1783. Huge territorial expansion followed in the 19th century, the period when the heroic myths of the Wild West were born and the Native Americans of the plains were driven off their land. The law that confined them to reservations was passed in 1868.

Crazy Horse (1849–1877) was a warrior leader and Sitting Bull (1834–1890) a chief of the Dakota Sioux people. They both fought to prevent American occupation of their lands.
